WASHINGTON, D.C. -- U.S. Representative, Nick J. Rahall, (D-WV), is pleased to announce that Mr. Seth Shelton, of Milton High School is the fourth Congressional district winner of the Tenth Annual Congressional Art Competition.

Mr. Shelton, who captured the winning title with his black and white photograph, was honored today at a press conference and reception for the four state winners at the Charleston Cultural Center. Mr. John Frohnmayer, Chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts, was among the distinguished guests in attendance.

The Congressional Art Competition, which is sponsored by the Congressional Arts Caucus, drew 104 art entries from all over West Virginia this year. The winners will have their winning pieces on display this summer in the corridor leading to the U.S. Capitol.

"It is very encouraging to know that there were a good number of students who participated in this year's competition," stated Rahall. "I believe that a student should have the opportunity to discover all of their abilities and use their resources."
